Dance: Tomomi Tanabe and Takao Kawaguchi

One step inside Tatsumi Hijikata's The Ailing Dance Mistress, and it will swallow you up in its vast labyrinth of uncanny words.

"Keep that fear in the birdcage inside you and take a very good care of it," said Hijikata once to butoh dancer Tomomi Tanabe, for whom these words became a lifeline. Decades later, Tanabe asked the still naive performer Takao Kawaguchi to join her in the project of dissecting this holy book of butoh.

Using the word "tatami" as their compass, the two explorers journey through "lessons of the sick and weak princess", taking you to "the darkness of the other side known to nobody, a beginning, or a resurrection." Welcome to The Sick Dancer.

Tatsumi Hijikata Born in Akita-prefecture in 1928. He moved to Tokyo in 1948, where he took dance lessons in a variety of styles including jazz dance. After Forbidden Colours in 1959, he went to give a series of experimental performances in the 1960s under the title of "Dance Experience." In the 1970s, yearning to reconnect with his native Tohoku, he developed the series of Tohoku Kabuki Project. This was to spawn Tatsumi Hijikata and the Japanese - Rebellion of the Body (1968); Twenty-seven Nights for Four Seasons (1972) and other works in this vein.

Yameru Maihime (The Ailing Dance Mistress)

Between 1977 and 1978 Hijikata's literary works were serialized in the magazine Shingeki and later published in book form by Hakusuisha in 1983.

In My Youth, Hijikata depicts - through the eyes of a young boy called Kunio - what he had observed and experienced his native Akita, exuding a mysterious charm through his unique style. Neither time nor place are specified, but his writings are deeply imbued with a sense of the passing seasons and nature. Nor could they be strictly considered a memoir or an autobiographical study, but instead crystallize into a form of ethnography. Closely linked to Butoh-fu, a series of choreographic notations Hijikata devised in the 1970s, they are more writings triggered during Butoh-fu's Butoh as conceived by Hijikata.

Tomomi Tanabe (butoh-ka) In February 1985 she took part in Hijikata's training sessions. Debuted with solo performance Epsilon) in May 1985 at Saramukan. She studied under Kunishi Kamiryo and Masahide Ohmori. As of 1997 she continued with her solo, Fishbowl performance series. She has performed widely: at Hakushu, in works by Masaki Iwana, Kota Yamazaki, Masahiko Akuta and others. In 2012, along with Takao Kawaguchi, they performed two solos based on texts from Hijikata's Yameru Maihime at the Kazuo Ohno Festival, and in performances in Akita and Aomori. As of 2016 she is appearing in Perception of the Body. Day upon day, she works as a midwife.

Takao Kawaguchi (dancer / performer) Joined Dumb Type in 1996. Later went solo from 2000, and has since been exploring live performance crossing borders of theater, dance, visual image and fine arts, collaborating with artists of different disciplines. From 2008 he began solo performance series a perfect life, the 6th work of which was presented at the 5th Yebisu Eizo Festival at the Tokyo Metropolitan Museum of Photography in 2013. Recently he approached Butoh in The Sick Dancer (2012) and About Kazuo Ohno (2013). The latter was nominated for NYC Bessie Award in 2016, and currently touring around the world. Latest works include: TOUCH OF THE OTHER (Los Angeles 2015; Tokyo in 2016) and BLACKOUT (2018, Tokyo).

10 February 2018

Special All Night Program following the performance of The Sick Dancer

"Kitasenju BAP Night"

Butoh emerged from the effervescence of Japanese culture in the 1960s to gradually become a worldwide phenomenon; the term Butoh is now part of the lexicon of modern performance. At present the NPO Dance Archive Network is conducting a survey on activities by Butoh dancers and groups both in Japan and overseas. By means of this comprehensive survey, we would ultimately like to contribute to a better overall understanding of Butoh and widely share the legacy of the elder generation of Butoh performers. On this occasion we will ask dancers through the "living expression"to endorse and participate in this research project and also provide a small free presentation in which everyone can report and share information on Butoh's current situation. This public appeal is open to any performance genre, and is not restricted to dance. See the application details at www.dance-archive.net.
